Chat Transcript

16:58:25 From Julie Codell : Can the changes and fluidity of trade journals be related to larger social issues in the 1870s and 80s, e.g., access to public education, and/or in light of changes in the trades themselves in technology, knowledge, classes of workers, etc., or the attempt by some to become identified as professional?

16:59:14 From Fionnuala Dillane to Priti Joshi(direct message) : Laurel has her hand up too

16:59:29 From Priti Joshi to Fionnuala Dillane(direct message) : Reacted to "Laurel has her hand ..." with 👍

17:00:13 From Laurel Brake : another query about the year 1870 and change of GC? what about the growth of the news sector in the UK through the cheap access to the telegraph that year??

17:03:16 From Jim Mussell : Another thing that strikes me about 1870 is the appearance of the journal Nature. I might have missed this, Ali, but do you think that had an influence on the reconfiguration of the Gardeners' Chronicle?

17:04:13 From Teja Varma Pusapati : I was wondering about why and when some field/trade would get seen as an "ally" rather than a competitor-gardening/agriculture (Ali's presentation), for example. Also, Jamie, did you come across this kind of tension in the trade journals?)

17:11:06 From Sharon Cogdill : Thank you very much for a great panel!

17:11:08 From Andrew Hobbs : Thank you, 3 fascinating papers

17:11:12 From Catherine Waters : Thank you to all the panellists for a great session!

17:11:24 From Teja Varma Pusapati : Thank you for this wonderful session!

17:11:32 From Annemarie McAllister : Thanks for three really interesting and well-researched papers

17:11:43 From Sarah Pelletier : Thank you all for your papers! Super interesting and lots to think about :)

17:11:44 From Matthew Stephens : Thank you all - three fascinating presentations.
